31ST SUNDAY IN ORDINARY TIME

Practise what you Preach

Jesus said to his disciples: "The greatest among you must be your servant." When Jesus gives us his commandments of love as our way of life, he is not talking about how we should feel but rather about how we should live. Our feelings change very often but our love should continue to grow through the ways we are attentive to one another. In the marriage relationship, for example, this quality of attentiveness is one that needs to be reviewed and developed very regularly so that your love can shine out to your wife/husband and radiate out to the whole community. Each person in this relationship is not there simply for what they can get but also for what they can give. The same must be true of family life. And it is certainly true of our faith community. We can get into the mentality of being receivers within this community. It is so important to become a giver if our faith is to come truly alive.
